This semester in CE302A has been both challenging and rewarding. Looking back, I realize that I have improved not only in my reading and writing skills but also in the way I approach learning. Since CE302A focused mainly on reading, grammar, and vocabulary, I had to spend a lot of time practicing and developing my English skills. Throughout the semester, I learned many things that helped me become more confident in using English.

At the beginning of the semester, I found some parts of the course difficult. The reading passages sometimes required more concentration than I expected, especially when there were many unfamiliar words and expressions. I also struggled with remembering vocabulary and understanding how to use certain words correctly in different contexts. Grammar was another challenge because some rules seemed easy during lessons but became confusing during exercises and writing tasks. However, through class practice, assignments, and regular review, I gradually improved. I learned that paying attention to context and practicing consistently helped me understand lessons better.

Another important part of this course was the classroom activities and teaching style. Our teacher always prepared many activities for us, including both group work and individual tasks. One thing I liked was how he encouraged students to engage with the lesson through games and interactive activities instead of only teaching through lectures. This made the class more interesting and enjoyable. The activities also helped me communicate with classmates, share ideas, and participate more actively in learning. However, because there were many activities, there were times when I felt tired and burned out. Sometimes it was difficult to maintain my energy and focus throughout all the tasks. Even so, I understand that these activities were meant to help students participate more and improve our understanding of the lessons.

Overall, CE302A has been a valuable learning experience for me. It helped strengthen my reading, grammar, and vocabulary skills while also teaching me the importance of effort and consistent practice. Although I still have areas that need improvement, I am proud of the progress I made this semester. I believe the knowledge and experience I gained from this course will continue to help me in my future studies.

In conclusion, CE302A taught me that learning is a process that requires patience, effort, and determination. This course not only improved my English skills but also helped me become a more active and confident learner.
